

COURTS ARE AFTER THE BIG SWINDLERS.

Four Indictments Found Against Valentine in Brooklyn.

Chief Witness Against the Other Men Suddenly Disappears in This City.

He is John Conklin, Who Has Made
Large Sales of Bicycles to Baker & Co.

OFFICERS UNABLE TO FIND HIM.

Prosecution Afraid That He May Have Met
Foul Play at the Hands of the Gang—A Big Clothing
House Involved.

The first of the indictments against the members of the band of swindlers whose operations have been fully described in the Journal, was found by the Kings County Grand Jury yesterday. Evidence as to the wholesale frauds perpetrated by the men was also laid before the Grand Jury in this city, but no bills were returned, as the chief witness on whom the State's attorney relied had mysteriously disappeared, and no trace of him could be found by the officers sent to hunt him up.

This witness is John Conklin, of the Anglo-American Cycle Fittings Company, of No. 105 Chambers street. This company was swindled out of a large number of bicycles by the gang, working under the name of John H. Baker & Company. Mr. Conklin represented the bicycle company in the transaction and visited the office of Baker & Company to make inquiry as to the reliability of the members of the gang to whom the goods were to be shipped.

There he met Abbott, who introduced him to several others who are implicated in the deal. It is because of his knowledge of so many of the men that Conklin's testimony is especially valuable to the District Attorney. To obtain the same evidence would require the examination of many different witnesses and might not prove as satisfactory in the end.

Conklin was notified that he would be wanted before the Grand Jury yesterday, and said that he would be on hand. In spite of this he did not appear. Messengers were sent to his place of business, but found that he had not been there for some time. It was learned that he had left his home in the morning with the intention of going to the Criminal Courts building, and had with him some of the papers on which the prosecution relies to prove its case.

What Has Happened to Conklin? Search was continued for him all day, but no trace of him could be found. The officers of the District Attorney's office became alarmed, and feared that Conklin might have fallen into the hands of some of the swindlers, who might have robbed him of the incriminating papers and even done him violence in the hope of preventing him from testifying. Two other witnesses, J. H. Baker and C. W. Lawrence, were examined as to their knowledge of the swindlers, but were unable to tell enough to warrant the returning of true bills against any of the people concerned.

It is hoped that Conklin will appear to-day. If he does not the public will be asked to assist in the search for him, and the belief that he has met foul play at the hands of some of the gang will be materially strengthened.

In Brooklyn the authorities were more successful. They succeeded in obtaining four indictments against Valentine, the only member of the gang who is under arrest. The indictments were returned by the Grand Jury, and were returned in spite of the fact that the evidence against him was obtained from a confession (as printed in the Journal) and told of his part in the swindles of the gang and of the worthless checks which he had passed.

On the statements made in his confession two of the indictments were returned. These are for grand larceny in the second degree by securing goods on worthless checks, and for grand larceny in the second degree by passing the checks. The other two indictments are based on his relations with May Wintage, and were returned on her evidence. She stated that she was not eighteen years old when she began to live with Valentine as his wife. On this technicality he was held for trial on two charges.

Surprised at the Girl's Action. Valentine was greatly surprised at the return of the last two indictments. He saw that the young woman was doing all she could to harm him, but thought that the extent of her revenge would be to tell of the checks he had given her, and he says that he had no idea she was not eighteen years old when she met him, and that as she was given him in marriage by her father, a man of prominence and wealth. She is the mother of one child, a boy, who is now about five years old. The divorce proceedings were begun since Valentine's arrest, and Mrs. Valentine says she does not know of her husband's dual life until it was exposed in the newspapers.

In spite of the disclosures already made as to the extent of the evidence against him by the gang the ramifications of their plots have only been partly told. That they will ever be fully made public is improbable, as none of the operations were known to any one man, and many of the individual swindlers have been forgotten even by the men who took part in them. While Hough, McLaughlin and Abbott were the heads of the swindlers for the operations in this city, there were men fully as shrewd and unprincipled who worked in other places. In this way the gang included Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Baltimore in their field.

How Big Swindles Were Worked. In each of these places the head of the local band employed such men as he saw fit to carry on the petty swindles in which they were engaged. For these he made no account to the chief of the gang. It was only on the large frauds in which the services of the men in different towns were needed that the gang was divided. How they worked in these big schemes is shown by the following letter which was written by Hough in this city to George L. Robinson, who is one of his closest friends and a party to many of his schemes:

Dear Sir—Yours of the 9th came to hand this m., and I was very glad I had it to show this charge, at his place, but I had not the paper for my own use. In the course of the conversation he mentioned a piece of paper of which he had a copy, and which he had given to me. He said he had no recollection of ever making it. I told him he must have made it, as it came from him, and he said he had no recollection of it. Now, my dear fellow, I want to know what kind of paper you can get over there and the price of the same. I think I can use some paper with Baker & Co. as a cover, and I think I might get them in the inquiry as to what kind of "paper" can be secured and as to the price, refers to worthless notes of some firm with a good standing in the business world. This paper was to have been disposed of, as were the notes of Baker & Company, and when they fell due it would be found that the company was without assets. This method of swindling was a favorite one with Hough and his associates, and they usually seems along the Norfolk & Western Railroad, whose losses will foot up to more than $50,000.

After leaving the West Virginia district Salomon went into the "Big Sandy" lumber region in Eastern Kentucky. There he also made heavy purchases, but the amount of them is not yet known.

Rome, N. Y., Nov. 11.—John E. White, a brother of H. Kirk White, who is under arrest in Brooklyn, charged with forgery, came to Rome Saturday evening. He is an old schoolmate of W. J. Abbott, of the firm of Snow & Abbott, clothiers. He called on Mr. Abbott and told him he was traveling for a Corry, Pa., firm, and had taken time to stop off and shake hands. Mr. Abbott invited White to stay over Sunday, and he did so. He bought goods to the amount of $150 of Snow & Abbott, and when he left Sunday evening tendered a check for $25 in payment.

Mr. Abbott gave him $25.50 in change, and White shook hands with him very cordially and promised to return on Monday and show him his line of goods. He never came back. The check was drawn on the First National Bank of Albany and was signed C. H. Williams & Co. It was sent to Albany for collection and came back protested. White also bought a few small articles of T. W. Perry, a clothier, and gave him a check for $35 on a Brooklyn bank, receiving the change in cash. Mr. Perry has not yet received notice of protest.
